Re: Preliminary Proxy Statement of The Adams Express Company (NYSE: ADX)

Mr. Hooper:

Our firm, Karpus Management, Inc., d/b/a Karpus Investment Management ("Karpus") represents beneficial ownership of 659,226 shares of The Adams Express Company ("ADX" or the "Company") as of the record date indicated on the Company's preliminary proxy materials filed on September 6, 2006. We have read your recently released preliminary proxy materials and are writing to you to express our dissatisfaction with the inherent shareholder disregard expressed in the materials. In fact, while reading the preliminary materials, we found many instances where the proposed changes are argued to benefit the company's discretion in the long-run but find absolutely no compelling reason why it would be in shareholders' best interests to relinquish the key accountability measures listed in the proxy materials. What's more, we can find no indication why it is that the Board is calling this special meeting altogether because in our belief it would have been more efficient and cost effective to have shareholders vote on these issues at the same time that they voted on the routine annual meeting matters back in March. As an agent of the shareholders, the Board should be reminded that it is afforded the task of monitoring the activities of a Company's officers and/or managers and the overall performance of a Company so that it can enhance shareholder value. Given the circumstances before us, the Board appears to be failing in this task and also seems to forget about its duties to shareholders altogether. Sincerely, /s/ Brett D. Gardner
