JENNIFER SCANLON:

This is a terrific path forward for USG because it allows USG to finally become truly part of a global Gypsum company. Knauf's long history of strength and leadership in Europe their long history of investment in South America, and their more recent history of investment across Asia and Australasia is the perfect marriage with USG's long-standing market leadership here in North America.

ALEXANDER KNAUF:

USG is the undisputed market leader in North America. USG has a strong manufacturing excellence where, I think, Knauf can learn a lot.

We are the market leader in gypsum in Europe. We are the market leader in ceilings in Europe. We are number one ceilings in in Asia together with Armstrong and also a strong player in gypsum in Asia. What is missing on our maps is gypsum here in North America. And this is why, I think, USG and Knauf are perfect complements.

JENNIFER SCANLON:

I think one of the neat things about USG and Knauf together is the long history that we have had of multiple relationships between the joint venture for Aquapanel, which was a marriage of technology and opportunity. The history of USG Europe joining the Knauf European organization in the way that they fit together culturally.

ALEXANDER KNAUF:

Knauf is a family-owned company. It was founded by my grandfather and his brother in 1932. Both were, by education, mining engineers. And following the world recession, they started their own business knowing what the that gypsum is a wonderful mineral. They mined the gypsum by hand, burned the gypsum and then sold it on the back of the bicycle. So I was born and raised next to a gypsum board line in a small village in Germany, three and a half thousand inhabitants. I had the opportunity in 2002 to spend a year with USG. It was my first assignment abroad. What was a fantastic experience when I was touring the plants a few weeks ago, was that I met quite a lot of people again, the same people that I ve met 16 years ago but in different positions.

JENNIFER SCANLON:

It s one of the things I love about USG, is people join USG, they stay for their careers, they have a lot of opportunities to move through various plant roles and corporate roles.

ALEXANDER KNAUF:

What I ve always admired with USG, it s a real center of excellence. And my commitment to USG and to the people working for USG is to retain that culture.

JENNIFER SCANLON:

The way that I see these two cultures coming together is that at our essence USG is a manufacturing company. At our essence we're a leader. And at our essence we have a deep respect for technology and innovation. And I believe that those are some key elements of Knauf's culture as well.

ALEXANDER KNAUF:

Knauf values are partnership, you treat people as partners. It is commitment, you're committed to what you do. And you're entrepreneur, you take the opportunity. And the fourth value is being human. So at Knauf, people are not a number in the system.

JENNIFER SCANLON:

I think that's a really important element of our culture that will link with the Knauf culture. Safety is our number one core value. It's something that is so ingrained so deeply in every employee, how important it is for every employee to go home in as good or better shape than they came to work every day.

ALEXANDER KNAUF:

Our commitment is to invest into the people of USG, to invest in the brand of USG, but also invest heavily into the plants of USG. The benefit of being a private company is that we can take investment decisions that favor long-term, strategic position at the expense of short-term financial goals.

JENNIFER SCANLON:

I think it's a very useful strategy for a capital-intensive industry.

ALEXANDER KNAUF:

What will this mean for the people, for the employees, of USG? USG will continue to be an independent company, but under umbrella of private ownership. USG will continue to have a CEO that is based here in Chicago, in the U.S. So it will be managed locally. I want to assure the employees of USG that, as in the past and the future, we want to be able to attract, retain and to develop the best talent. And we are fully aware about that, that we have to pay competitive wages.

JENNIFER SCANLON:

Our employees have heard very clearly that your commitment to their future is real and it is exciting for them. So what is next for employees? First and foremost, I think employees need to remember that we are separate companies until this transaction closes. And the transaction is expected to close in early 2019. Between now and then, I've encouraged everyone to focus on our goals, focus on our corporate priorities, hit your numbers and business as usual.

ALEXANDER KNAUF:

I'm really looking forward to getting to know all the USG employees. And I'm welcoming everybody to become a part of the Knauf family.

Subject: Video: My Conversation with Alexander Knauf

USG team,

On June 11, we announced that we entered into an agreement for Knauf to acquire USG Corporation. We are confident that the combination of our two companies will create a leading building products manufacturer, create opportunities for our team to be part of a larger, more global organization, and allow us to better serve our customers with a comprehensive portfolio of products.

Alexander Knauf visited our Chicago headquarters last week, and we sat down to discuss what this exciting combination means for you as a USG employee. You can watch the video on USG Connections by clicking here.

It is important that our employees in the field see this video as well. We ask our manufacturing and sales leaders to download this video and share it with your teams.

Many of you have sent questions about the transaction to TransactionQuestions@usg.com. We are collecting the questions and preparing fact sheets and frequently asked questions, which will be posted to the Knauf Transaction Page on USG Connections in early July.

Thank you for your dedication, and for staying focused on working safely, running our business and serving our customers.

Regards,

Jenny
