Merged EchoStar and Hughes
Will Deliver Local Broadcast Channels
To All 210 U.S. Television Markets

(February 26, 2002 - Washington, D.C.) Watching television is easily one of the great American past times and until D.B.S. (or Direct Broadcast Satellite) was introduced, cable was the only option for multi-channel programming. The only catch is, 42 million homes and thousands of communities can't get their local TV stations via D.B.S. That all may change real soon if the federal government approves it.

This morning , EchoStar Communications and Hughes Electronics, parent companies of Dish Network and DirecTV D.B.S. services, which announced a proposed merger late last year, announced they have filed an application with the Federal Communications Commission to launch and operate a new satellite. This will allow them to deliver local broadcast channels in all 210 television markets throughout the United States. Currently, local channels delivered by satellite are only available in 42 of these markets.

The new satellite will work in concert with four other DirecTV and EchoStar spacecraft in three orbital slots. This, combined with efficiencies gained through the merger, will make it possible to deliver local channels to every household in every television market in the country, including rural and under-served areas. The combined company will also bridge the proverbial digital divide by offering affordable high-speed satellite internet access to people in every market in the country. People living in rural areas, who do not now have access to DSL and cable modems, will soon have access to high-speed Internet service via satellite and at affordable rates.

The delivery of local channels in 210 markets is contingent upon the proposed Hughes-EchoStar merger receiving approvals from the Federal Communications Commission and the Department of Justice, as well as the successful launch of the new spot-beam satellite. Only if this proposed merger is approved, will households in small and rural television markets in every state finally have a competitive alternative to Cable Operators who have had virtual local monopolies on service.

B-ROLL FOOTAGE INCLUDES: Satellite in space animation, rocket launch, installation of DBS in home, family and various people watching television and on the internet, homes in rural areas, soundbites with: Jack Shaw, President and CEO, Hughes Electronics; Charlie Ergen, Chairman, CEO, Echostar; Eddy Hartenstein, Chairman, CEO, DirecTV.
