STRATEGIC RATIONALE

Business portfolio matches future DoD requirements

Solves DRS's strategic need for services capability

Provides customer and program diversification

Creates synergistic opportunities

Provides foundation to sell into emerging Homeland
Defense marketplace

BUSINESS PORTFOLIO MATCHES DOD REQUIREMENTS

Future DoD requirements underscore the need for deployable, mobile forces

Emphasis on Army modularization

De-emphasis of NEW, big-ticket weapons and platforms

U.S. military troop end strength will need to be increased to support ongoing and future missions

Modularity and increased troops will result in an increased demand for soldier support and services

DRS will be better positioned to provide sustainment, reset, modernization and transformation for its customers.

SOLVES DRS'S STRATEGIC NEED FOR SERVICES CAPABILITY

DRS has a long history of providing products

ESSI has well-established services and support businesses providing

Increased intimacy with customer

Access to flexible contract vehicles

Enhanced access to DoD O&M accounts

Additional sources for organic growth

DRS can provide significantly higher value to its customers by providing logistics services and support with its hardware

INTEGRATION HISTORY

Integration strategy used with IDT was very successful

Strategic Business Units (SBUs) were established to anchor the operating business

Lines of business (LOBs) were organized within SBUs

Common customers, products and technologies were grouped together

Group organizations were formed to provide day-to-day and strategic oversight to nascent SBU organizations

SBU organizations are now integrated, independent business units moving in the right direction

MOVING FORWARD WITH ESSI

Integrated company with 3 operating Groups

Permits refinement of existing DRS Group and

DRS & ESSI

The combination creates a leading defense supplier of integrated products, systems, services and support serving U.S. military forces, intelligence agencies, prime contractors, and international military forces.

The combination would employ in excess of 9,500 people worldwide and generate annual revenues greater than $2.5 billion.
