To the Editor:

In reaching its decision to oppose the merger of Hewlett-Packard and Compaq, the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation was steered not by any Hewlett family member, but by its independent determination that the merger will not create value and is not in the best interests of H-P or its stockholders.

Contrary to Thomas G. Donlan's assertion in his recent editorial (How Firm a Foundation, December 17), the purpose of the Foundation is not to hold control from beyond the grave—a purpose that William Hewlett could hardly have had in mind, given that the foundation's interest in H-P shortly before his death was as low as 2% of its assets (equivalent to 0.1% of the company).

Even if one aggregates the H-P shares currently held by the foundation with those held by Mr. Hewlett's revocable trust, those holdings amount to only an approximate 5.6% interest in H-P, which is far from a controlling stake. The Foundation's purpose is, as stated in its articles of incorporation, to promote the well-being of mankind by supporting selected activities of a charitable nature, as well as organizations or institutions engaged in such activities, including, to name just a few, the Johns Hopkins University Institute for Policy Studies, various foundations for neighborhood improvement projects and the Boys and Girls Clubs of Silicon Valley.

Also, contrary to Donlan's assertion, the foundation is quite diversified. In fact, shares of H-P stock constituted only approximately 19% of the foundation's assets as of yearend 2001. While the foundation will continue to receive additional H-P shares as a result of distributions from Mr. Hewlett's revocable trust, the foundation will also continue the diversification strategy it began more than 15 years ago. That diversification strategy includes an asset allocation policy among domestic and international stocks, bonds and real estate as well as alternative investments such as private equity and absolute return strategies.

The determination as to whether the foundation would support the merger of H-P and Compaq was made by an independent stock committee of experienced business and investment experts. No Hewlett family member currently serves or has ever served on the independent stock committee. In making its decision, none of the stock committee members discussed the merger with, or was influenced by, any member of the Hewlett family. Our stock committee's sole concern was one of value: Is the foundation's investment in H-P likely to be more or less valuable if H-P merges with Compaq?

Edgar Filing: HEWLETT PACKARD CO - Form DFAN14A

Our stock committee determined, with the input of outside investment experts, that the merger is likely to be detrimental to the value of our investment in H-P in both the short and the long term.
