TIDEWATER O'MALLEY RETIRES, TAYLOR NAMED CEO

NEW ORLEANS, MARCH 28, 2002 -- Tidewater Inc. (NYSE:TDW) announced today that William C. O'Malley, the company's Chairman, President and Chief Executive officer for most of the past eight years, has officially stepped down as Tidewater's Chief Executive Officer, handing over the reins of leadership to Dean E. Taylor.

Taylor, 53, has served as President of Tidewater since October 2001 when O'Malley, 65, announced his impending retirement at the end of March 2002. Taylor's career with Tidewater started in 1978 where he served as an assistant manager in the company's Morgan City, La. office. With his Navy background and business savvy, Taylor gradually worked his way up through Tidewater's ranks to become an executive vice president in December of 2000. Ten months later, Taylor, who has spent the majority of his career overseeing a number of Tidewater's foreign operations, most recently Central and South America, West Africa and the North Sea, was announced as O'Malley's successor.

"Bill O'Malley has redefined what was once thought unachievable in our industry, both in terms of profitability and in terms of safe operations," commented Taylor. "I look forward to continuing to guide our company on the course he has set for it and, wherein possible, making a great company even better."

O'Malley, who will continue to serve as Tidewater's non-executive Chairman until July 2003, came to Tidewater in 1994. One of his first moves at Tidewater was to shore up the company's financial status in order to free up capital for vessel investments. He promoted more stringent safety standards in the offshore marine industry as a whole by first imposing these standards on Tidewater. This was accomplished by holding regular safety meetings, implementing safety programs and making managers accountable for accidents in their areas. O'Malley's initiatives have proven effective. Lost time accidents have fallen by 94% during his tenure.

"This changing of the guard in Tidewater's senior management should be relatively seamless," commented O'Malley. "Everyone has taken this transitional process very seriously in order to insure that Tidewater continues the momentum and financial stability it has maintained over the last few years. I am absolutely certain that Dean will be successful in his leadership of Tidewater."

Tidewater Inc. owns and operates over 565 vessels, the world's largest fleet of vessels serving the global offshore energy industry.
